Pioneer of the Police Star is a Pretty Newspaper Worker.

PUEBLO, COL., November 4.-Since Colorado extended the suffrage to women eleven years ago the State has had women legislators, women State and county officials and, in Klowa, a cattle county officials and, in Klowa, a cattle ranch county, a woman justice of the peace. But not until a few days ago, when Miss Pauline Christman was sworn in by Chief McCafferty, of Pueblo, has any city in Colorado had a woman pullegrap.

sany city in Colorado and a policenan.

Many persons unfamiliar with conditions in Colorado might imagine a short haired, strident voiced "unsexed female," plain and ancient, as the sort of person who would receive such an appointment, instead of a talented young newspaper writer who was given her commission as a recognition for no mean service in the manufacturing centre of Colorado.

Miss Christman had regular duties on a local paper. While going about she was annoyed by the fikhy condition of the sidewalks, the floors of street cars and other public places which many of Pueblo's chitzens persisted in regarding as cuspidors.

Pueblo's clizens persisted in regarding as cuspidors. The fight against this evil had long been wasced before women's clubs and medical societies, but resolutions and learned speeches were the only risult before Miss Christman came from Denver. This young woman had been in town but a few days when she went to a policeman who was swinging his club over a well mottled sidewalk. "Why don't you arrest the men who persist in spitting on the sidewalks and in other public places?"

"No orders, miss. Can't exceed authority, you know. You'll have to see the Chief."
Chief McCafferty listened sympathetics.

the Chief.

Chief McCafferty listened sympathetically, but explained that there was no adequate ordinance-ngainst spitting. He advised Miss Christman to see Mayor

The Mayor agreed with her in every particular. If she would see the members of the City Council he would use his influence to assist in having her say.

his influence to assist in having her saggestions embodied in an ordinance, and pledged himself then to see to it that it was enforced rigidly.

Miss Christman had the ordinance drawn, arranged for newspaper support

Amenities of Conductors.

A nervous, forsey woman, evidently a stranger in the city, got into an Amsterdam-Avenue car. She wanted to make everything very clear to the conductor, so that she could reach the proper street. She told him the street number also the name of the person she was going to visit, and he promised not to forget her when they reached the right corner,

"It was quite plain to the other passengers that she had little faith in his promise, as at every block she gave an apprehensive start, and every few minutes apprehensive start, and every few minutes would ask if that was the place to alight. Reassured she would resume her seat and her nerwous tremors. At length the conductor told her rather sharply to sit still and the would call the street when they reached it. When they got there he shouted so loud that the woman leaped in the air and then stood still in the middle of the car, uncertain which way to go "Which end shall I get out?" she asked in a trembling voice. Making a Complete Job.

There was a family gathering after the doctor was gone, and everybody looked saily at Aunt Jane, whose face was swellen with neuralgia. The verdict had been that she must go down to fac sity and have a denitat attend to her teeth: and the general dolefulness was because Aunt Jane's deep-rooted aversion to the city was well known. Presently the old lady hierself broke the silence. "Well, there's one thing certain." she said, "While I'm down in the city I'm just going to have my suppendix removed and be done with it. I won't have another trip to New York hanging over me the rest of my life."—New York Press. and the general dolefulness was because

Greatest Values in Dress Goods

This Week the Store Has Ever Offered

SPECIAL SALE BEGINS TO-MORROW.

A Richmond lady who had received samples of dress goods from one of the largest department stores in the United States—a store claiming to undersell any of its competitors—brought the samples here to compute them with our dress goods. Her opinion is that our styles are far more desirable, and, quality for quality, our prices lower than those of the inetropolitan store.

A plaid for which the Northern house asks: $1.25 we sell at 98c, is one example of the difference in prices.

The Miller and Rhoads store has no superiors and rew equals.

Beginning Management
